

EVENING BULLETIN.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 5, 1856.

LIFE OF GENERAL MORGAN—By James Graham. Derby & Jackson, New York. The biography of the celebrated patriot and chief, the leader of the Virginia Line in the battles of the Revolution, is a valuable addition to the history of that interesting period. It has been compiled from the MSS which were left by Gen. Morgan. In it will be found a number of interesting letters never hitherto published, written by Washington, Greene, Lafayette, Wayne, Gates, Jefferson, Hamilton, Henry, Rutledge, and many others of the most distinguished men of the Revolutionary era, which are valuable for their connection with that memorable period and as lights cast upon the history of the dawn of American nationality and independence.

For sale by Morton & Griswold.

RELIGION IN AMERICA—By Robert Baird. Harper & Bros., New York. These chapters were first written by Dr. Baird for the information of inquirers in Great Britain and Europe in regard to the religious condition of the United States. They contain a full, complete, and very interesting exposition of the Origin, History, Economy, Action, and Influence of Religion in the United States and its relation to the State. Although originally intended for the information of the people of another hemisphere, it will be found very interesting to American readers. There are few among us who have any adequate conception of the vastness of this subject, which has been so ably treated by Dr. Baird.

For sale by Morton & Griswold.

LIFE AND TRAVELS OF HERODOTUS. By J. T. Wheeler. Harper & Bros., New York. 2 vols. In this work Mr. Wheeler has presented, in the form of an imaginary biography of the great ancient traveler Herodotus, the most interesting features of the history of nations in the fifth century before the Christian era. It is an illustration of the manners, religion, literature, arts, and social condition of the people of Eastern Europe, Asia, and Africa in the days of Pericles and Nehemiah. It presents in a readable form a complete history of that period compiled by an able writer and experienced historian. For sale by Morton & Griswold.

A RIGHTEOUS JUDGE.—A young man was sentenced in Pittsburg last Saturday to six months' imprisonment in jail for assaulting another with "knucklers." His counsel, previous to the passing of the sentence, solicited leniency for his client on the score of good character and gentlemanly conduct generally. The Judge replied that it was fortunate for him to be indicted for an attempt to murder, and said when the people with gentlemanly culture and good character performed such deeds he should punish them as rowdies and ruffians. "The first gentleman of the land shall fare no better than the poorest man."

Louis NAPOLEON.—It is stated that arrests continue to be made in Paris of individuals suspected of conspiring against the life of the Emperor. The conduct of his Majesty on the occasion of his return to Paris, and since, gives the impression to the public that these arrests are based upon facts which fully warrant the utmost rigor of the police. His entry into Paris was private, unannounced as regards the hour, and made under the most cautious circumstances. His carriage, which was closed, was surrounded by mounted men, and, instead of passing over the usual route, they passed rapidly through the city by the river quays.

LONO'S CLASSICAL ATLAS.—This production will greatly facilitate the labors of the student of ancient geography, and will prove invaluable to the reader of ancient history. It contains maps and charts of every empire, province, and country to which the classical student will want to refer. In addition to the numerous plates and maps, it contains also a condensed sketch of ancient geography and a copious index. The whole is arranged in a form most convenient for use and reference. It is for sale by C. Hagan.

THE BUNSBY PAPERS—Second Series, by John Brougham. Derby & Jackson, New York.—This is a collection of "Irish Echoes," comprising a number of well-told popular stories, in which the peculiarities of the Irish character are aptly illustrated, and the romantic legends which abound among the people of the "ould country" are happily introduced. The tales are much in the style of those written by Lever, and will afford amusement for many an idle home. For sale by Morton & Griswold.

WIDDIFIELD'S NEW COOK BOOK.—T. B. Peterson, Philadelphia.

Mrs. Hannah Widdifield has been celebrated for nearly fifty years as a cake-baker and pastry cook in Philadelphia. She has taught hundreds of pupils the art of the kitchen, but her recipes have never before been published. They are plain, practical, and have one great advantage—they are not extravagant. They are the result of experience and not mere theories.

An interesting account of the progress of affairs in Walker's country (we may call it his at least for the present) will be found in our letter from Grenada.

Andrew Jackson was once making a stump speech out West, in a small village. Just as he was concluding, Amos Kendall, who sat behind him, whispered:

"Tip 'em a little Latin, General. They won't be satisfied without it."

The man of iron will instantly thought upon the few phrases he knew, and in a voice of thunder wound up his speech by exclaiming:

"E pluribus unum—sive que non—ne plus ultra—morsum in parvo!"

The effect was tremendous, and the Hoosiers' shouts could be heard for miles.

To the Editors of the Louisville Bulletin:

GRANADA, Aug. 27, 1856.

GENTLEMEN: Having just returned safely from a most extraordinary march and victories from a terrible battle, I hasten to give you an impartial account of it.

On Monday, the 18th of the present month, we received orders to march in half an hour from that time, as the gallant Capt. Englehardt had arrived with the important tidings that 300 Cabomistas (natives of Nicaragua, inimical to the Walker administration) had invested El Paso, a hamlet in Chontales.

In less than the period allowed them to prepare, the gallant company of Kentuckians had formed in the Plaza, followed briefly by company B of the same battalion. The order was given to fall off, and the number of martial souls was found to be, in all, 73; the remainder sick in hospital, the balance drunk in grog-shop. After standing for a brief period, that the boys might sufficiently admire the many-colored flags pendant behind, the order was suddenly given by Lieut. Col. Mac Donald to forward. All that day and night we continued to move our dexterous and sinisters at quick time; our road for the first twenty miles was pleasant enough, being on the lake shore; but Heavens! after crossing the Tipitapa river, the mud oftentimes reached our middles, but the average was just above the knees. Before we had marched two miles through this horrid country, the battalion, with the exception of two or three, were entirely barefooted, and the road, if you can call it so, began to be strewn with blankets, coats, &c., mine being the first contribution.

With our feet full of cactus thorns, we at length arrived within half a mile of the hostile town, when the word to halt was passed, and the order of attack made known. Company A, Kentucky, was to march around the town and cut off the enemy's retreat. Company B and Rangers were to make the charge.

After gaining our position, we waited (in a spot invisible to the enemy, but from whence we could perceive the approach of our friends) the attack. At length they came; at the pace of a broken down drove of hogs they charged; we immediately rushed on to their support at the rate of half a mile an hour; the town, consisting of three houses, was carried, after receiving a furious volley of—execrations from two old women and a lame boy.

Thus were we crowned with glory, taking a town without the loss of a man, and finding, after we were in possession, that no enemy had been there and none expected; that we had marched forty-seven miles to recover Captain Englehardt's horse (which is literally the fact—he had misrepresented everything to regain him, and now, thank God, is under arrest for it), and would return to Granada the laughing-stock of the army, which place we reached, after having been lost for two days, and in a state bordering on starvation.

When we started, I had just recovered from an attack of the caulentera fever, and was so exceedingly weak I could scarcely walk. Strange to say, it has been of benefit to me, but several others it has proved fatal. We buried three on the march and two after reaching Granada—five lives for one horse!

We passed in the first part of the march through the richest country I ever beheld—that is, naturally rich. Mahogany trees, logwood, and the vanilla bean abound in such quantities that in clearing two hundred acres a person would acquire an immense fortune, and the cultivation of the same amount of land would yield from five to eight thousand dollars, clear, per annum.

On arriving here, we found a number of Kentuckians who were in possession of our quarters, and I am sorry to inform you, of several clean shirts, which confidingly we had left exposed.

Among the Kentuckians who arrived are James Gaskell, who is a very clever gentleman, but who, unfortunately, is but the ninth part of a man, and more addicted to the use of the needle than the sword. The remainder are Chas. Bull, Chas. Klessendorf, Ham. Dobbin, and about ten others. Gaskell has been appointed 2d Lieutenant of Company A, Rangers, and Andrews, from Louisville, 1st Lieutenant of the same company; the remainder joined the Rangers as privates.

No promotions have taken place in our battalion with the exception of Chas. A. Gore, who has been promoted from 1st Lieutenant to Captain of Company B. He is from Louisville.

I have just received orders to hold myself in readiness for another march. This time we will most assuredly meet an enemy numbering about 400, at Tipitapa (a large city on Lake Nicaragua). Our whole battalion will march this time, and we will have battle, and a hard one. Allow me to assert confidently, that "old Kentucky honor will not be sullied."

I must conclude and prepare for the march. I will merely ask you to publish Benj. H. Talbot's death; he died of the fever, prevalent here. From what I can learn he resided in the vicinity of Bardstown.

The company is doing well. The officers are in good health and remarkably fine spirits.

I forgot to tell you that Ben Johnson, who killed Ben Lawrence, expired on the 25th, after a short attack of fever. He was a private in Company B.

Yours truly,

B. M. A.

P. S. From what I can learn we shall probably be the advanced guard of the entire army against Leon. Look out for a regular battle. It will be a decisive one. In one month Walker's destiny will be decided.

How to Stop a Serenade.—A marriage took place lately in a little village in the suburbs of Paris. There is nothing very extraordinary in a marriage, but this one was rather out of the usual order. A youth of twenty espoused a widow over fifty years of age, and this disproportion seemed to the young people of the village so exceedingly strange, that they determined to show their appreciation of the affair by giving the newly wedded pair a serenade on their wedding night. The sort of serenade contemplated is called a "charivari," and differs from other serenades, inasmuch as the instruments employed on such occasions consist of tin pans, old bones, and other discordant promoters of a disagreeable noise. The measures of the serenaders were all taken, and they would undoubtedly have disturbed the slumbers of the blissful couple, had not the garde-champêtre, or village policeman, by some means discovered what was going forward. He determined to put a stop to the proceedings, and, in order to accomplish his purpose, he had recourse to an ingenious stratagem. Just after dark, he caused a report to be circulated through the place that a menagerie which was exhibiting in a neighboring village had that afternoon lost a tiger, which had escaped from his cage, and taken his course in that very direction. That was enough. Everybody hurried home as fast as he could, and took good care not to be caught out of doors that night, by which means the ill-assorted married pair escaped a well-merited insult.

MARRIED,

On Thursday, 20th October, by the Rev. Dr. Hawks, rector of Calvary Church, J. A. D'ARBOUR, Esq., to Miss Clara, eldest daughter of Dr. W. Beddoe, of New York.

THE PRINCES OF OUDÉ AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE FOUNTAINS.

The London Times gives a description of the last display for the season of the Grand Fountains at the Palace of Sydenham, which took place on the 11th ult., in the presence of 5,538 persons, notwithstanding the extremely unfavorable state of the weather. The display is described as not equal to some former exhibitions:

As a proof of the keen interest taken in the display of the fountains, it may be stated that a very large proportion of the company, especially the fairer part of it, left the building, and though the landscape was soaked with rain, wended their way down to the plateau at the foot of the grounds, whence the best view of the spectacle is always to be obtained. The rest witnessed it from the galleries and balconies of the Palace.

The visit to the palace during the day of two of the princes of Oude, with a numerous retinue, lent additional interest to the occasion.

The party, 33 in number, traveled in eight carriages and cabs from Harley-house, in the New-road, their present residence, and arrived at Sydenham about 1 o'clock. The Princes were attended by the Prince of Surat and the Nawab of Rampoor, both now on a visit to this country, and the suite included two moonshees and four eunuchs, one of the latter of whom wore a shawl which glittered with gold. The appearance of the elder of the Princes, the General, as he is called, and brother of the King of Oude, caused considerable sensation.

He is a handsome man, about 45 years of age, with a dark moustache, and a fair complexion for an Oriental. He was dressed in a style of almost inconceivable splendor. He wore a cap of scarlet velvet in the shape of a crown, richly embroidered with gold, and decorated with jewels. The remainder of his dress was all covered with a profusion of gold, the front of it especially being literally studded with precious stones. He has been lame from his birth in his left foot, and walks with great difficulty. He was wheeled round the building in a chair, preceded by two chobdars, each carrying a large gold stick. The young Prince, with his nephew, is an intelligent looking youth, about 18, above the middle height, with a light olive complexion, a fine dark, lustrous eye, and a profusion of rich black hair. He wore an elegant tunic embroidered with gold, a crimson velvet robe similarly decorated, and a tiger's head dress, surmounted with red feathers.

The retinue of the Princes presented a striking contrast to themselves.

A few of them were old, decrepit men, and many were meanly dressed. They appeared to belong to distinct races, and to have little community of feeling. The black Nubian eunuchs were particularly conspicuous. Captain Brandon and Mr. Waller accompanied the party, and Mr. Hayes performed the duties of cicerone, his descriptions and explanations of the various courts being conveyed through the medium of Mr. Waller, a gentleman who, we believe, is the legal adviser of the Princes, and whose long residence in India enables him to converse with them in their own language. During their progress through the building they met, by an odd coincidence, Colonel Outram, who, it will be remembered, was the English resident at Lucknow, the capital of Oude, when the reigning Queen was deposed. The colonel recognized Captain Brandon and was by him presented to the Princes, who shook hands with him, and exchanged some other civilities. As the party was about to enter the Temple of Justice in the Court of the Alhambra, their attention was called to the circumstance of the word "god" being written on the tessellated floor, and they refused to tread upon it, as that would have involved an act of gross desecration according to their religion.

A military cousin is always a fascinating fellow, and, if this cousin be a grenadier—if he be a sergeant of grenadiers, and, above all, of the grenadiers of the Imperial Guard—and if he wears proudly upon his manly breast the Cross of the Legion of Honor, with the Crimean Medal to keep it company—in that case the grenadier-cousin is not merely a rose, but a reunion of all the sweetest flowers, an enormous bouquet, in which myrtles and laurels occupy a very conspicuous position; and there is no female cousin who is not proud to acknowledge him, pour him out a cup of welcome, and give him an arm upon the promenade. This cousin-grenadier of the Imperial Guard is not a myth, oh, no!—unfortunately, here he is before the tribunal of correctional police, accused of a little dereliction, which is but the natural effect of his profession. Veni, vidi, vici, said Caesar, and so may say one sergeant. His last conquest was a pretty cousin, who happened to be married, and whose husband, having found out which way the wind was blowing, brought complaint against his wife and her grenadier on a charge of—ahem! Being questioned by the magistrate, the lady avowed the delit of which she was accused.

"Is this true?" asked the magistrate of the sergeant.

The Sergeant—(twisting his moustache and drawing himself up proudly)—I never contradicted a lady in my life!

Magistrate—You are the more culpable that your victim is your cousin, and that she is married.

Sergeant—I didn't know that when I—when that is, I had never seen my cousin—

Magistrate—But when you visited her and saw her husband, too, you should have known that she was no longer at liberty.

Sergeant—(twisting his moustache again)—I don't wish to hurt my cousin's feelings, but I must tell you that I had never heard of her marriage, and I took her housekeeping for one of those little Parisian arrangements, you know!

Magistrate—Has she never told you of her marriage?

Sergeant—After—yes; but before—not a word.

The Lady—My cousin tells the truth. He speaks with military frankness.

Magistrate—These are poor excuses. Have either of you anything to add in your defense?

The Lady—No, sir; except that my husband set me the example.

Sergeant—And me, too! I heard he was the very duce among the women. Everybody talked of his conquests. That rather piqued me, and so—and so—

The tribunal condemned the guilty parties to three months' imprisonment.

ANECDOTES OF GEN. ETHAN ALLEN.—At East Manville, on Grand river, some twenty miles below Grand Rapids, Michigan, lives a family by the name of Hopkins; and here, in the possession of an aged lady, niece of Gen. Ethan Allen, is his sword.

Aware, says our informant who saw it two years since, that the leaders of the Revolution were often selected for their weight and metal, as well as other military accomplishments, we were not surprised to find their arms of a similar temper. The sword in question was without ornament, and might be a hundred years old by its appearance; very heavy, with an iron hilt, on which is engraved in rude characters, as if cut with a jack knife, the name "Ethan Allen;" the blade, long, straight, and single-edged, in the style of the Damascus steel.

Though the strong rust-spots were proof that a long term of peace is uncongenial to weapons of war, this relic of the older time seemed to possess in pent-up silence all the fire that flashed from its surface when waving in triumph over the gate of Ticonderoga.

One of our company intimated to the owner that if fifty dollars would be any object he would like to present the sword to his father, an early friend and adviser of Gen. Allen, with the assurance that it should descend, as heirloom of great value, through successive generations.

The lady, casting a glance at the huge logs of which the house was built, with a flash of the eye said to be peculiar to the General and his family, quietly remarked: "There are some things in this house that money will not purchase—this is one of them."

From one who was personally acquainted with Ethan Allen, we have another characteristic anecdote, which we do not remember ever before to have seen in print:

The General had a famous white charger, well fitted by his goodly proportions to the bearer of the sturdy frame of his master. One day, in the village in Vermont where Allen resided (we forgot the name), coming up the street at full tilt, he drew up suddenly before a store where a group of his townsmen were standing. One of them being something of a wag, and thinking himself secure of a laugh against the General this time, which, with all his usual readiness he could not throw off, called out, "So, Allen, you are the rider on the pale horse?" Quick as a flash, Ethan replied, as, suiting the action to the word, he wheeled around so as to bring his friends in the rear, looking at them over his shoulder, "Yes, and hell follows after."—N. Y. Post.

JOHN PHOENIX, HIS LAST.—This clever wit, in the following squib, amusingly takes off the prevalent custom of giving testimonials to everybody, upon all sorts of occasions, and for all sorts of things:

ON BOARD THE STEAMSHIP CALIFORNIA, PANAMA.

To Capt. R. M. Whiting:

Dear Sir: I, the undersigned, cabin passenger on board the steamship California, during her late trip from San Francisco, beg to tender you, on behalf of myself, my heavy and sincere acknowledgment of your skill as a seaman, and varied courtesy as a gentleman. To your skill and foresight I attribute entirely the favorable weather that we have enjoyed, and your polite attention in invariably giving me the second joint at dinner, your liberality in helping me to pie a second time, and the noble-hearted generosity with which you have at times presented me with one, and even two cigars, can never be forgotten whilst Memory holds her seat.

The retinue of the Princes presented a striking contrast to themselves.

A few of them were old, decrepit men, and many were meanly dressed. They appeared to belong to distinct races, and to have little community of feeling.

The black Nubian eunuchs were particularly conspicuous. Captain Brandon and Mr. Waller accompanied the party, and Mr. Hayes performed the duties of cicerone, his descriptions and explanations of the various courts being conveyed through the medium of Mr. Waller
